Text of Obama's speech on Afghanistan

Updated: Wednesday, 02 Dec 2009, 2:18 PM CST
Published : Wednesday, 02 Dec 2009, 2:18 PM CST

Text of President Barack Obama's speech Tuesday about his plans for the Afghanistan war, as provided by the White House:

Good evening. To the United States Corps of Cadets, to the men and women of our armed services and to my fellow Americans: I want to speak to you tonight about our effort in Afghanistan — the nature of our commitment there, the scope of our interests and the strategy that my Administration will pursue to bring this war to a successful conclusion. It is an honor for me to do so here — at West Point — where so many men and women have prepared to stand up for our security, and to represent what is finest about our country.

To address these issues, it is important to recall why America and our allies were compelled to fight a war in Afghanistan in the first place. We did not ask for this fight. On Sept. 11, 2001, 19 men hijacked four airplanes and used them to murder nearly 3,000 people. They struck at our military and economic nerve centers. They took the lives of innocent men, women and children without regard to their faith or race or station. Were it not for the heroic actions of the passengers on board one of those flights, they could have also struck at one of the great symbols of our democracy in Washington and killed many more.

As we know, these men belonged to al-Qaida — a group of extremists who have distorted and defiled Islam, one of the world's great religions, to justify the slaughter of innocents. Al-Qaida's base of operations was in Afghanistan, where they were harbored by the Taliban — a ruthless, repressive and radical movement that seized control of that country after it was ravaged by years of Soviet occupation and civil war, and after the attention of America and our friends had turned elsewhere.

Just days after 9/11, Congress authorized the use of force against al-Qaida and those who harbored them — an authorization that continues to this day. The vote in the Senate was 98 to 0. The vote in the House was 420 to 1. For the first time in its history, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization invoked Article 5 — the commitment that says an attack on one member nation is an attack on all. And the United Nations Security Council endorsed the use of all necessary steps to respond to the 9/11 attacks. America, our allies and the world were acting as one to destroy al-Qaida's terrorist network and to protect our common security.

Under the banner of this domestic unity and international legitimacy — and only after the Taliban refused to turn over Osama bin Laden — we sent our troops into Afghanistan. Within a matter of months, al-Qaida was scattered and many of its operatives were killed. The Taliban was driven from power and pushed back on its heels. A place that had known decades of fear now had reason to hope. At a conference convened by the U.N., a provisional government was established under President Hamid Karzai. And an international security assistance force was established to help bring a lasting peace to a war-torn country.

Then, in early 2003, the decision was made to wage a second war in Iraq. The wrenching debate over the Iraq War is well-known and need not be repeated here. It is enough to say that for the next six years, the Iraq War drew the dominant share of our troops, our resources, our diplomacy, and our national attention — and that the decision to go into Iraq caused substantial rifts between America and much of the world.

Today, after extraordinary costs, we are bringing the Iraq war to a responsible end. We will remove our combat brigades from Iraq by the end of next summer, and all of our troops by the end of 2011. That we are doing so is a testament to the character of our men and women in uniform. Thanks to their courage, grit and perseverance, we have given Iraqis a chance to shape their future, and we are successfully leaving Iraq to its people.

But while we have achieved hard-earned milestones in Iraq, the situation in Afghanistan has deteriorated. After escaping across the border into Pakistan in 2001 and 2002, al-Qaida's leadership established a safe haven there. Although a legitimate government was elected by the Afghan people, it has been hampered by corruption, the drug trade, an underdeveloped economy and insufficient security forces. Over the last several years, the Taliban has maintained common cause with al-Qaida, as they both seek an overthrow of the Afghan government. Gradually, the Taliban has begun to take control over swaths of Afghanistan, while engaging in increasingly brazen and devastating acts of terrorism against the Pakistani people.

Throughout this period, our troop levels in Afghanistan remained a fraction of what they were in Iraq. When I took office, we had just over 32,000 Americans serving in Afghanistan, compared to 160,000 in Iraq at the peak of the war. Commanders in Afghanistan repeatedly asked for support to deal with the reemergence of the Taliban, but these reinforcements did not arrive. That's why, shortly after taking office, I approved a long-standing request for more troops. After consultations with our allies, I then announced a strategy recognizing the fundamental connection between our war effort in Afghanistan, and the extremist safe-havens in Pakistan. I set a goal that was narrowly defined as disrupting, dismantling, and defeating al-Qaida and its extremist allies, and pledged to better coordinate our military and civilian effort.

Since then, we have made progress on some important objectives. High-ranking al-Qaida and Taliban leaders have been killed, and we have stepped up the pressure on al-Qaida worldwide. In Pakistan, that nation's Army has gone on its largest offensive in years. In Afghanistan, we and our allies prevented the Taliban from stopping a presidential election, and — although it was marred by fraud — that election produced a government that is consistent with Afghanistan's laws and Constitution.

Yet huge challenges remain. Afghanistan is not lost, but for several years it has moved backwards. There is no imminent threat of the government being overthrown, but the Taliban has gained momentum. Al-Qaida has not re-emerged in Afghanistan in the same numbers as before 9/11, but they retain their safe havens along the border. And our forces lack the full support they need to effectively train and partner with Afghan security forces and better secure the population. Our new commander in Afghanistan — General McChrystal — has reported that the security situation is more serious than he anticipated. In short: The status quo is not sustainable.

As cadets, you volunteered for service during this time of danger. Some of you have fought in Afghanistan. Many will deploy there. As your commander in chief, I owe you a mission that is clearly defined and worthy of your service. That is why, after the Afghan voting was completed, I insisted on a thorough review of our strategy. Let me be clear: There has never been an option before me that called for troop deployments before 2010, so there has been no delay or denial of resources necessary for the conduct of the war. Instead, the review has allowed me ask the hard questions and to explore all of the different options along with my national security team, our military and civilian leadership in Afghanistan, and with our key partners. Given the stakes involved, I owed the American people and our troops no less.

This review is now complete. And as commander in chief, I have determined that it is in our vital national interest to send an additional 30,000 U.S. troops to Afghanistan. After 18 months, our troops will begin to come home. These are the resources that we need to seize the initiative, while building the Afghan capacity that can allow for a responsible transition of our forces out of Afghanistan.

I do not make this decision lightly. I opposed the war in Iraq precisely because I believe that we must exercise restraint in the use of military force and always consider the long-term consequences of our actions. We have been at war for eight years, at enormous cost in lives and resources. Years of debate over Iraq and terrorism have left our unity on national security issues in tatters and created a highly polarized and partisan backdrop for this effort. And having just experienced the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression, the American people are understandably focused on rebuilding our economy and putting people to work here at home.

Most of all, I know that this decision asks even more of you — a military that, along with your families, has already borne the heaviest of all burdens. As president, I have signed a letter of condolence to the family of each American who gives their life in these wars. I have read the letters from the parents and spouses of those who deployed. I have visited our courageous wounded warriors at Walter Reed. I have traveled to Dover to meet the flag-draped caskets of 18 Americans returning home to their final resting place. I see firsthand the terrible wages of war. If I did not think that the security of the United States and the safety of the American people were at stake in Afghanistan, I would gladly order every single one of our troops home tomorrow.

So no — I do not make this decision lightly. I make this decision because I am convinced that our security is at stake in Afghanistan and Pakistan. This is the epicenter of the violent extremism practiced by al-Qaida. It is from here that we were attacked on 9/11, and it is from here that new attacks are being plotted as I speak. This is no idle danger, no hypothetical threat. In the last few months alone, we have apprehended extremists within our borders who were sent here from the border region of Afghanistan and Pakistan to commit new acts of terror. This danger will only grow if the region slides backwards and al-Qaida can operate with impunity. We must keep the pressure on al-Qaida, and to do that, we must increase the stability and capacity of our partners in the region.

Of

course, this burden is not ours alone to bear. This is not just America's war. Since 9/11, al-Qaida's safe-havens have been the source of attacks against London and Amman and Bali. The people and governments of both Afghanistan and Pakistan are endangered. And the stakes are even higher within a nuclear-armed Pakistan, because we know that al-Qaida and other extremists seek nuclear weapons, and we have every reason to believe that they would use them.

These facts compel us to act along with our friends and allies. Our overarching goal remains the same: to disrupt, dismantle and defeat al-Qaida in Afghanistan and Pakistan, and to prevent its capacity to threaten America and our allies in the future.

To meet that goal, we will pursue the following objectives within Afghanistan. We must deny al-Qaida a safe-haven. We must reverse the Taliban's momentum and deny it the ability to overthrow the government. And we must strengthen the capacity of Afghanistan's security forces and government, so that they can take lead responsibility for Afghanistan's future.

We will meet these objectives in three ways. First, we will pursue a military strategy that will break the Taliban's momentum and increase Afghanistan's capacity over the next 18 months.

The 30,000 additional troops that I am announcing tonight will deploy in the first part of 2010 — the fastest pace possible — so that they can target the insurgency and secure key population centers. They will increase our ability to train competent Afghan security forces and to partner with them so that more Afghans can get into the fight. And they will help create the conditions for the United States to transfer responsibility to the Afghans.

Because this is an international effort, I have asked that our commitment be joined by contributions from our allies. Some have already provided additional troops, and we are confident that there will be further contributions in the days and weeks ahead. Our friends have fought and bled and died alongside us in Afghanistan. Now we must come together to end this war successfully. For what's at stake is not simply a test of NATO's credibility — what's at stake is the security of our Allies and the common security of the world.

Taken together, these additional American and international troops will allow us to accelerate handing over responsibility to Afghan forces and allow us to begin the transfer of our forces out of Afghanistan in July of 2011. Just as we have done in Iraq, we will execute this transition responsibly, taking into account conditions on the ground. We will continue to advise and assist Afghanistan's security forces to ensure that they can succeed over the long haul. But it will be clear to the Afghan government — and, more importantly, to the Afghan people that they will ultimately be responsible for their own country.

Second, we will work with our partners, the U.N., and the Afghan people to pursue a more effective civilian strategy, so that the government can take advantage of improved security.

This effort must be based on performance. The days of providing a blank check are over. President Karzai's inauguration speech sent the right message about moving in a new direction. And going forward, we will be clear about what we expect from those who receive our assistance. We will support Afghan ministries, governors and local leaders that combat corruption and deliver for the people. We expect those who are ineffective or corrupt to be held accountable. And we will also focus our assistance in areas such as agriculture that can make an immediate impact in the lives of the Afghan people.

The people of Afghanistan have endured violence for decades. They have been confronted with occupation — by the Soviet Union, and then by foreign al-Qaida fighters who used Afghan land for their own purposes. So tonight, I want the Afghan people to understand — America seeks an end to this era of war and suffering. We have no interest in occupying your country. We will support efforts by the Afghan government to open the door to those Taliban who abandon violence and respect the human rights of their fellow citizens. And we will seek a partnership with Afghanistan grounded in mutual respect to isolate those who destroy, to strengthen those who build, to hasten the day when our troops will leave, and to forge a lasting friendship in which America is your partner and never your patron.

Third, we will act with the full recognition that our success in Afghanistan is inextricably linked to our partnership with Pakistan.

We are in Afghanistan to prevent a cancer from once again spreading through that country. But this same cancer has also taken root in the border region of Pakistan. That is why we need a strategy that works on both sides of the border.

In the past, there have been those in Pakistan who have argued that the struggle against extremism is not their fight, and that Pakistan is better off doing little or seeking accommodation with those who use violence. But in recent years, as innocents have been killed from Karachi to Islamabad, it has become clear that it is the Pakistani people who are the most endangered by extremism. Public opinion has turned. The Pakistani army has waged an offensive in Swat and South Waziristan. And there is no doubt that the United States and Pakistan share a common enemy.

In the past, we too often defined our relationship with Pakistan narrowly. Those days are over. Moving forward, we are committed to a partnership with Pakistan that is built on a foundation of mutual interests, mutual respect and mutual trust. We will strengthen Pakistan's capacity to target those groups that threaten our countries and have made it clear that we cannot tolerate a safe haven for terrorists whose location is known and whose intentions are clear. America is also providing substantial resources to support Pakistan's democracy and development. We are the largest international supporter for those Pakistanis displaced by the fighting. And going forward, the Pakistani people must know: America will remain a strong supporter of Pakistan's security and prosperity long after the guns have fallen silent, so that the great potential of its people can be unleashed.

These are the three core elements of our strategy: a military effort to create the conditions for a transition, a civilian surge that reinforces positive action and an effective partnership with Pakistan.

I recognize that there are a range of concerns about our approach. So let me briefly address a few of the prominent arguments that I have heard, and which I take very seriously.

First, there are those who suggest that Afghanistan is another Vietnam. They argue that it cannot be stabilized, and we are better off cutting our losses and rapidly withdrawing. Yet this argument depends upon a false reading of history. Unlike Vietnam, we are joined by a broad coalition of 43 nations that recognizes the legitimacy of our action. Unlike Vietnam, we are not facing a broad-based popular insurgency. And most importantly, unlike Vietnam, the American people were viciously attacked from Afghanistan and remain a target for those same extremists who are plotting along its border. To abandon this area now — and to rely only on efforts against al-Qaida from a distance — would significantly hamper our ability to keep the pressure on al-Qaida and create an unacceptable risk of additional attacks on our homeland and our allies.

Second, there are those who acknowledge that we cannot leave Afghanistan in its current state but suggest that we go forward with the troops that we have. But this would simply maintain a status quo in which we muddle through and permit a slow deterioration of conditions there. It would ultimately prove more costly and prolong our stay in Afghanistan, because we would never be able to generate the conditions needed to train Afghan security forces and give them the space to take over.

Finally, there are those who oppose identifying a timeframe for our transition to Afghan responsibility. Indeed, some call for a more dramatic and open-ended escalation of our war effort — one that would commit us to a nation-building project of up to a decade. I reject this course because it sets goals that are beyond what we can achieve at a reasonable cost and what we need to achieve to secure our interests. Furthermore, the absence of a time frame for transition would deny us any sense of urgency in working with the Afghan government. It must be clear that Afghans will have to take responsibility for their security, and that America has no interest in fighting an endless war in Afghanistan.

As president, I refuse to set goals that go beyond our responsibility, our means or our interests. And I must weigh all of the challenges that our nation faces. I do not have the luxury of committing to just one. Indeed, I am mindful of the words of President Eisenhower, who — in discussing our national security — said, "Each proposal must be weighed in the light of a broader consideration: the need to maintain balance in and among national programs."

Over the past several years, we have lost that balance and failed to appreciate the connection between our national security and our economy. In the wake of an economic crisis, too many of our friends and neighbors are out of work and struggle to pay the bills, and too many Americans are worried about the future facing our children. Meanwhile, competition within the global economy has grown more fierce. So we simply cannot afford to ignore the price of these wars.

All told, by the time I took office the cost of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan approached a trillion dollars. Going forward, I am committed to addressing these costs openly and honestly. Our new approach in Afghanistan is likely to cost us roughly $30 billion for the military this year, and I will work closely with Congress to address these costs as we work to bring down our deficit.

But as we end the war in Iraq and transition to Afghan responsibility, we must rebuild our strength here at home. Our prosperity provides a foundation for our power. It pays for our military. It underwrites our diplomacy. It taps the potential of our people and allows investment in new industry. And it will allow us to compete in this century as successfully as we did in the last. That is why our troop commitment in Afghanistan cannot be open-ended — because the nation that I am most interested in building is our own.

Let me be clear: None of this will be easy. The struggle against violent extremism will not be finished quickly, and it extends well beyond Afghanistan and Pakistan. It will be an enduring test of our free society, and our leadership in the world. And unlike the great power conflicts and clear lines of division that defined the 20th century, our effort will involve disorderly regions and diffuse enemies.

So as a result, America will have to show our strength in the way that we end wars and prevent conflict. We will have to be nimble and precise in our use of military power. Where al-Qaida and its allies attempt to establish a foothold — whether in Somalia or Yemen or elsewhere they must be confronted by growing pressure and strong partnerships.

And we cannot count on military might alone. We have to invest in our homeland security, because we cannot capture or kill every violent extremist abroad. We have to improve and better coordinate our intelligence, so that we stay one step ahead of shadowy networks.

We will have to take away the tools of mass destruction. That is why I have made it a central pillar of my foreign policy to secure loose nuclear materials from terrorists, to stop the spread of nuclear weapons and to pursue the goal of a world without them. Because every nation must understand that true security will never come from an endless race for ever-more destructive weapons — true security will come for those who reject them.

We will have to use diplomacy, because no one nation can meet the challenges of an interconnected world acting alone. I have spent this year renewing our alliances and forging new partnerships. And we have forged a new beginning between America and the Muslim World — one that recognizes our mutual interest in breaking a cycle of conflict and that promises a future in which those who kill innocents are isolated by those who stand up for peace and prosperity and human dignity.

Finally, we must draw on the strength of our values — for the challenges that we face may have changed, but the things that we believe in must not. That is why we must promote our values by living them at home — which is why I have prohibited torture and will close the prison at Guantanamo Bay. And we must make it clear to every man, woman and child around the world who lives under the dark cloud of tyranny that America will speak out on behalf of their human rights, and tend to the light of freedom and justice and opportunity and respect for the dignity of all peoples. That is who we are. That is the moral source of America's authority.

Since the days of Franklin Roosevelt, and the service and sacrifice of our grandparents, our country has borne a special burden in global affairs. We have spilled American blood in many countries on multiple continents. We have spent our revenue to help others rebuild from rubble and develop their own economies. We have joined with others to develop an architecture of institutions — from the United Nations to NATO to the World Bank that provide for the common security and prosperity of human beings.

We have not always been thanked for these efforts, and we have at times made mistakes. But more than any other nation, the United States of America has underwritten global security for over six decades a time that, for all its problems, has seen walls come down, markets open, billions lifted from poverty, unparalleled scientific progress and advancing frontiers of human liberty.

For unlike the great powers of old, we have not sought world domination. Our union was founded in resistance to oppression. We do not seek to occupy other nations. We will not claim another nation's resources or target other peoples because their faith or ethnicity is different from ours. What we have fought for — and what we continue to fight for — is a better future for our children and grandchildren, and we believe that their lives will be better if other peoples' children and grandchildren can live in freedom and access opportunity.

As a country, we are not as young — and perhaps not as innocent — as we were when Roosevelt was President. Yet we are still heirs to a noble struggle for freedom. Now we must summon all of our might and moral suasion to meet the challenges of a new age.

In the end, our security and leadership does not come solely from the strength of our arms. It derives from our people — from the workers and businesses who will rebuild our economy; from the entrepreneurs and researchers who will pioneer new industries; from the teachers that will educate our children, and the service of those who work in our communities at home; from the diplomats and Peace Corps volunteers who spread hope abroad; and from the men and women in uniform who are part of an unbroken line of sacrifice that has made government of the people, by the people and for the people a reality on this Earth.

This vast and diverse citizenry will not always agree on every issue nor should we. But I also know that we, as a country, cannot sustain our leadership nor navigate the momentous challenges of our time if we allow ourselves to be split asunder by the same rancor and cynicism and partisanship that has in recent times poisoned our national discourse.

It is easy to forget that when this war began, we were united — bound together by the fresh memory of a horrific attack and by the determination to defend our homeland and the values we hold dear. I refuse to accept the notion that we cannot summon that unity again. I believe with every fiber of my being that we — as Americans — can still come together behind a common purpose. For our values are not simply words written into parchment — they are a creed that calls us together and that has carried us through the darkest of storms as one nation, one people.

America — we are passing through a time of great trial. And the message that we send in the midst of these storms must be clear: That our cause is just, our resolve unwavering. We will go forward with the confidence that right makes might, and with the commitment to forge an America that is safer, a world that is more secure, and a future that represents not the deepest of fears but the highest of hopes. Thank you, God bless you, God bless our troops, and may God bless the United States of America.

President to visit Madison school

Updated: Saturday, 31 Oct 2009, 12:50 PM CDT
Published : Saturday, 31 Oct 2009, 12:23 PM CDT

MADISON, Wis. (AP) - President Barack Obama will meet with students, teachers, parents and others at a Madison middl school on Wednesday., November 4, 2009

The White House released details of the president's visit on Friday.

Secretary of Education Arne Duncan is traveling with the president and will be with him at the event at Wright Middle School.

The White House says Obama's comments will be focused on strengthening America's education system.

The speech is closed to the public. Only invited guests will be allowed in.

His visit comes at the same time the Wisconsin Legislature is considering a number of proposals designed to strengthen it chances of capturing part of $4.5 billion in federal education stimulus money.

Pearl Harbor Day

December 7, 1941 – "A DATE THAT WILL LIVE IN INFAMY."

Now, Genter Media, Inc., in association with Creation Films, is privileged to present:

A WORLD PREMIERE TELEVISION EVENT

Pearl Harbor -Dawn of Death

A powerful three hour mini-series! Sat, 12/19/09 (2-5p)

September 11, 2001 was a day that changed American forever. It was a day of powerful images and heart wrenching emotions; it was a day like no other. Except one, Sunday, December 7, 1941, the day of the surprise attack on the American fleet at Pearl Harbor. Almost 60 years separate these two tragedies, but both events remain as fresh in our collective memories as the day they happened. Both days will "live in infamy" forever.

On Sunday, December 6, we have an opportunity to salute the men and women of our greatest generation through this vivid, factual television presentation. Pearl Harbor-Dawn of Death contains exclusive eyewitness accounts of what happened in the months leading up to the surprise attack, the events of that fateful Sunday morning and how a nation came together in the critical days after Pearl Harbor.

Pearl Harbor-Dawn of Death, Part I, II, and III: As the day that would live in infamy dawned, many of the servicemen stationed at Pearl Harbor were attending morning services. Within hours, the survivors would be praying for revenge. The three episodes, "Win First, Fight Later," "Day of Infamy" and "Waking a Sleeping Giant," contained in this program will take you through the build-up of Japanese-American hostilities leading up to that fateful day in December. You will see the violence and horror of the assault through the eyes of the men who were there, the very men who fought to save their comrades from the twisted steel and watery graves. The heroic men whose battle cry became "Remember Pearl Harbor". This series also contains post-war interviews with the Japanese leaders of the attack; exclusive eyewitness accounts of the U.S. soldiers and sailors who survived the surprise assault on the sleeping fleet, and rare color footage.

THIS IS THE TRUE STORY HOLLYWOOD NEVER TOLD.

- Available on a Barter Basis: 7/7 per hour
- Available as a three hour mini series or three one hour programs
- Broadcast Window: November 25 - December 27, 2009

SYNOPSIS: First Business is a preview of today's trading day – not a look back at yesterday's news. Anchor Tom Hudson goes beyond the headlines – digging deeper for the real ideas your viewers need to make their money work.

Mornings are a busy time – so this show gets right to the point. In the first 3 minutes viewers get the "Outlook" which includes a quick earnings and economic calendar, the "Morning News Briefing" and "Trader Talk" – insight straight from the pits on how traders plan to play one of the day's story stocks.

And we don't slow down. In the "Bell Boys", Hudson and a guest tackle 4 topics in 4 minutes. They have to make their points quickly, because when the bell rings their time is up. Floor trader Jon Najarian puts his money where his mouth by telling viewers exactly how he's playing one stock in the "Trade of the Day." Viewers can follow the election with "Politics & Money", and don't leave home until you've watched the "Business Travel Forecast."

In addition to outperforming both Bloomberg, CNNFN and CNBC in the early morning time periods, First Business is highly competitive against major market local newscasts and provides the perfect lead-in to local or network news. Why let your business viewers leave for the cable networks?

Veteran's Day Invitation

Dear Veteran:

On Wednesday, Nov. 11, from 9:00 – 9:45 AM, Hortonville Elementary School will be celebrating Veteran's Day as a school and a community. Any veterans and their family members are welcome. The students will be honoring all veterans in a short program with student speakers, songs, and smiles.

The program will be held in the gymnasium. If any veterans and/or their family members would like to attend, please RSVP to the school's office 920-779-7922. Please share with us your name, branch of service, war/conflict served, and how many will attend the ceremony.

Sincerely,

Hortonville Elementary School Staff, Students, and Administration

Obama Administration Officials to Visit Wisconsin to Discuss Bio-Energy and Clean Energy Economy

WASHINGTON, October 8, 2009 - On Friday, October 9, Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack, Nancy Sutley, Chair of the White House Council on Environmental Quality, and Governor Jim Doyle will tour the Crave Brothers Farm and Dairy Operation in Waterloo, Wis. The Crave Brothers Farm is an example of a successful modern dairy, using green energy sources to power the farm, cheese factory and 120 area homes.

The Administration and State officials will discuss the opportunities for rural America to embrace science and lead efforts to create clean energy jobs, achieve energy independence, mitigate climate change, and transition to a clean energy economy.

The USDA provides leadership on food, agriculture and natural resources and touches the life of every American. Secretary Vilsack and the USDA are working to promote a sustainable, safe, sufficient and nutritious food supply, and ensure that America revitalizes rural communities by expanding economic opportunities.

WHAT: Briefing and Tour of Crave Brothers Farm & Dairy Operation with Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack, CEQ Chairwoman Nancy Sutley, Governor Jim Doyle and Wisconsin Secretary of Agriculture Rod Nilsestuen

WHEN: Friday, October 9, 2009
1:45-2:45p.m.

WHERE: Crave Farms
W11555 Torpy Road Waterloo, WI 53594

Memorial for Crandon Shooting Victims Nears Completion as Second Anniversary Approaches.

It¹s been almost two years since off-duty police officer Tyler Peterson took the lives of six young people in Crandon Wisconsin, and severely wounded another. And now a memorial in honor of the young victims is nearly complete just in time for the anniversary of the tragedy, October 7th.

The Fountain of Youth Memorial features a stone gazebo, six individual healing gardens, an infinity walkway and later this month a fountain.
Plaques bearing the name and pictures of Katrina McCorkle, Jordanne Murray, Bradley Schultz, Aaron ³Chunk² Smith, Lindsay Stahl and Liana Thomas will be placed on six stone columns inside the gazebo.

A candlelight vigil will take place at the memorial site at 6 pm on Wednesday night (oct 7).

According to project coordinator, Gary Mueller, hundreds of volunteers from the community stepped forward to donate both time and materials to help construct the Memorial.

The Memorial site is one block west of Lake Ave (Crandon¹s Main Street) on the corner of Washington St and Hazeldell, the original site of the murders.
Early this year, the house was purchased and razed to make way for the memorial.

³We hope the memorial helps bring some peace to the victim¹s families and friends,² notes Mueller. ³It is amazing the way the entire town came together to build this memorial. It is a testament to the generosity and the closeness of this community.²

The group has also launched a new website (CrandonMemorial.org) to honor the victims. The website features a tribute video, a slideshow of progress on the physical memorial, a space where friends can share stories and well-wishes, as well as information on how people can donate to the memorial. According to Lee Smith, mother of Aaron ³Chunk² Smith, money is still needed to finish the memorial, and to build a fund to maintain the site and gardens into the future. The group has also discussed plans to create a scholarship fund in honor of the victims.

The website also offers the chance for people to purchase a memorial brick to be placed into one of the many walkways at the Memorial. Bricks can be purchased year round, even after the anniversary.

A fund is set-up at the Laona State Bank for donations. Checks can be made to the Fountain of Youth Memorial and send to Laona State Bank, PO Box 395, Crandon, WI 54520.

Holy Cross students to tune in to President Obama's address on education

All grade levels at Holy Cross Catholic School, 3002 Bay Settlement Road in Green Bay, will be watching President Obama's history-making address to school children on September 8 at 12 pm. 11AM This will be the first time that an American President has spoken directly to the nation's schoolchildren about the importance of education.

In a letter to the nation's educators, U.S. Secretary of Education Anne Duncan said that President Obama will challenge students to work hard, set educational goals, and take responsibility for their learning.

"Since taking office, the President has repeatedly focused on education, even as the country faces two wars, the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression and major challenges on issues like energy and health care," writes Duncan. "The President believes that education is a critical part of building a new foundation for the American economy. Educated people are more active civically and better informed on issues affecting their lives, their families and their futures."

About Holy Cross Catholic School
Located on the growing northeast side of Green Bay at the historic crossroads of Church and Bay Settlement Roads, Holy Cross Catholic School is the point at which faith, community and education converge. Holy Cross Catholic School has been in existence for 141 years and has an enrollment of 200 students in grades EC3 to 8th grade. For more information, go to www.holycrossfamily.org.

At 12:00 p.m., Eastern Time (ET), September 8, 2009, President Barack Obama will deliver a national address to the students of America. (Please note that this is a change from the originally scheduled time.) During this special address, the president will speak directly to the nation's children and youth about persisting and succeeding in school. The president will challenge students to work hard, set educational goals, and take responsibility for their learning.

The U.S. Department of Education invites students of all ages, teachers, and administrators to participate in this historic moment by watching the president deliver the address, which will be broadcast live on the White House Web site (http://www.whitehouse.gov/live/) and on C-SPAN at 12:00 p.m., ET. We also encourage educators to use this moment to help students get focused and inspired to begin the new academic year. The Department of Education offers educators a menu of classroom activities—created by its teachers-in-residence, the Teaching Ambassador Fellows—to help engage students in the address and stimulate classroom discussions about the importance of education.

- Classroom Activities (7 – 12)
  PDF (170K) | MS Word (184K)

To further encourage student engagement, the U.S. Department of Education is launching the "I Am What I Learn" video contest. On September 8, we will invite students to respond to the president's challenge by creating videos, up to two minutes in length, describing the steps they will take to improve their education and the role education will play in fulfilling their dreams.

We invite all students age 13 and older to create and upload their videos to YouTube by October 8. Submissions can be in the form of video blogs, public service announcements (PSAs), music videos, or documentaries. Students are encouraged to have fun and be creative with this project! The general public will then vote on their favorites to determine the top 20 finalists. These 20 videos will be reviewed by a panel of judges including U.S. Secretary of Education Arne Duncan. The panel will choose three winners, each of whom will receive a $1,000 cash prize.

Starting this Friday, you can visit www.ed.gov/iamwhatilearn to find out more.

1. When will the president deliver his address?

President Obama will speak to the students of America at 12:00 p.m., ET on Tuesday, Sept. 8, 2009. (Note that this is a change from the time originally scheduled.)

2. How can I watch the president's address to students?

Viewers may watch the address via the Internet by visiting the White House Web site, at http://www.whitehouse.gov/live/, where the address will be streamed live.

C-SPAN, the cable public affairs network, will cover the president's speech live on its C-SPAN television channel and provide live streaming video online at C-SPAN.org. The speech also will be aired live on C-SPAN Radio (90.1 FM in Washington, D.C., and channel 132 on XM Satellite Radio).

White House television will make the address available via satellite for access by local broadcast outlets and school districts. The satellite feed will be live for testing and calibration beginning at 11am ET on September 8th using the following coordinates:

- Galaxy 28/Transponder 17, Slot C (9 MHz)
- Uplink Frequency 14344.5 Horizontal
- Downlink Frequency 12044.5 Vertical

For updates related to the president's speech, please visit http://www.whitehouse.gov/mediaresources/ or www.ed.gov.

3. What is the duration of the president's address?

The president is scheduled to speak for 15 – 20 minutes. The U.S. Department of Education provides resources for educators who may choose to use the president's address as a teachable moment. Two menus of classroom activities, one for students in grades Pre-K – 6, and another for students in grades 7 – 12, may be found here:

Classroom Activities (Pre-K – 6)
PDF (115K) | MS Word (119K)

Classroom Activities (7 – 12)
PDF (170K) | MS Word (184K)

4. Does the White House Web site have the capacity to host all of the potential live viewers for this event?

The White House Web site is equipped with the appropriate amount of bandwidth to accommodate a large viewership.

5. Will the address be available in some form after the original broadcast date and time?

Downloadable video of the speech will be made available at http://www.whitehouse.gov/mediaresources/ as well as on www.ed.gov. C-SPAN.org will provide archived and "on-demand" viewing options.

6. Will the address include captioning for deaf and hard-of-hearing viewers?

The live address broadcast on C-SPAN will include captioning.

7. Is the "Get Schooled" television event in the evening on Sept. 8 hosted by the Viacom network and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation connected to the president's speech?

While the U.S. Department of Education is a partner in this effort, the president's noontime address is a separate event. Get Schooled is a five-year national platform developed by Viacom and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation that connects, inspires, and mobilizes people to find effective solutions to education challenges. The initiative provides resources, information, and creative programming aimed at engaging a range of audiences in an effort to address America's education crisis. A television event, Get Schooled: You Have the Right, formally kicks off the "Get Schooled" initiative at 8:00 p.m., ET on Sept. 8.

Coats for Kids Has a Warming Touch

FOX 11 joined forces again with the Salvation Army and Cumulus Broadcasting to collect new and used coats for needy children across Northeast Wisconsin and Upper Michigan. Sponsors of the campaign included Fox Communities Credit Union, Faith Technologies, PDQ Car Wash, and Gunderson Cleaners. The annual Coats for Kids campaign kicked off with a wildly successful collection at the Packers vs. Bears game on September 13. A record was set with $10,676 plus 255 coats collected that day. Perhaps it was the warm temperatures or just a great crew of volunteers taking donations that helped score such a tremendous goal for the Salvation Army.

Dry cleaners were recognized for their hard work this year with Coats for Kids Dry Cleaner Salutes on FOX 11. Fifteen (:15) second promos highlighted the name and location of individual participating dry cleaners. Photos of staff or storefronts also helped round out the promos.

On October 26 and 27, PDQ Car Wash locations across Northeast Wisconsin offered coupons for free car washes to customers dropping off new or used child-sized coats. FOX 11's Good Day Wisconsin featured the promotion with several live reports from their Oneida Street location on Monday morning. According to Dale Bornemann, General Manager at PDQ Car Wash, 1,337 new and used coats came in over the two-day promotion.

"I would like to thank everyone for all the help this year with our special day," he said in a follow-up email. Dismal weather led to a weak turnout on Monday, and prompted PDQ Car Wash management to extend the offer through Tuesday at all locations.

And the campaign enjoyed some upscale support in the form of a local hotel chain. The Cambria Suites Coats for Kids Charity Event took place at the Green Bay and Appleton locations on Thursday, November 5. At the Green Bay location Mayor Jim Schmitt welcomed guests and thanked them for generously giving to their neighbors in need. A silent auction and a 50/50 raffle brought in additional funds for Coats for Kids. A special thanks goes to Subway for donating sandwich certificates. 66 new and used coats came into the Green Bay location alone.

Coats were distributed in Green Bay at Notre Dame High School on Saturday, November 14. This year approximately 9,147 coats were collected throughout the viewing area.

FOX 11 LIVING

FOX 11 Living WITH ANN

FOX 11 Living picked the 10 finalists, and viewers voted on their top two photos.

The Grand Prize winner is "Morning Frost" by Joann Will of Manitowoc. She will receive a Nikon CoolPix Digital Camera. Second place winner is "Small Pond" by Scott Denny of Green Bay. He will receive a Digital Photo Frame.
