for
1st Quarter 2011
January 1 through March 31, 2011

Quarterly Summary:
January 2011-March 2011

January 2011:

We started off the year with a manhunt for an escaped prisoner in the Mat-Su. The inmate escaped in the morning from the recreation yard and was caught by the late afternoon. Department of Corrections said there isn't constant monitoring of the recreation yard and something it's going to look at changing.

A superior court judge ruled that an Anchorage ordinance to give homeless people five days before seizing and destroying their property is unconstitutional. This issue has been an ongoing dispute with the city and the ACLU since 2009.

The Trans-Alaska Pipeline was shutdown for almost a week after an oil spill near Prudhoe Bay. It caused the State of Alaska to lose millions each day it was shutdown.

The federal health care reform law was up for repeal this month. As Alaska was one of the many states against the reform, people from both sides were out talking about the pros and cons of the new law.

The Anchorage School District announced it was facing a shortfall of more than 20 million dollars. It announced recommendations for cutbacks in sports, graduation coaches and summer school for elementary school students.

The month ended with the start of the 2011 Legislative Session down in Juneau and Governor Parnell's State of the State Address. The big issue headed into this year's session was reducing the oil tax structure for the state and possibly getting rid of AGIA.

February 2011:

The Anchorage School Board tapped into their emergency reserve funds to balance next year's budget and save some jobs. However, questions were raised about why it wasn't used in the past to avoid panic in the community. Board members said they never did it before because they wanted to make sure the school district's financial future was protected. Officials say the same situation could happen again next year.

After years of layoffs and rolling closures within the Anchorage Fire Department, it got a five million dollar boost. It came in the form of a federal grant the fire department applied for from FEMA. The monies won't be used for new positions but for positions that weren't filled, layoffs and rolling closures.

The biggest story this month was the sexual assault trial involving a former Anchorage Police officer, Anthony Rollins. We covered each day of the trial. Multiple victims took the stand to testify what happened to them. Rollins even took the stand to say he was innocent and everything was consensual. After three weeks, the jury found Rollins guilty.

A University of Alaska student was found dead. It was a 23-year-old decorated cross-country runner. He was found dead at his apartment.

We found out that food safety violations are pretty common in Anchorage. There is a shortage of food safety inspectors. We examined how difficult it is for food inspectors.

The month ended with an Alaskan state lawmaker taking a stand against the TSA. Rep. Sharon Cissna refused a pat down by TSA officials at the Seattle airport. She ended up taking a ferry back to Juneau, which took her three days. Her situation got national attention and uncovered more issues involving the pat downs as an invasion of privacy.

March 2011:

A federal judge in Florida said he wouldn't stop states from moving forward with the health care reform law. Governor Sean Parnell said the ruling was a smack down and called on the President to respond. The judge said it was unconstitutional to require Americans to buy health insurance.

The first murder of the year for Anchorage occurred this month. It was a get-together in Eagle River that escalated into a drunken game of Russian roulette. One person was dead and the other charged with the murder....both soldiers in the Army.

Japan was rocked by an earthquake, which produced a massive tsunami. It sent tsunami warnings all over the world including here in Alaska. The outskirts of the state saw maybe a 1-foot wave but no injuries. Huge amounts of rescuers and aid being sent from the U.S. went through Anchorage as well as local aid. Many people set up funds for people to donate here in Alaska. But the biggest concern was radiation from Japan's nuclear plant.

Alaska found traces of increase radiation and as the month ended more radiation is expected.

The month ended with a huge movement down in Juneau during session. Governor Sean Parnell's push to give the oil companies a tax break and restructure the oil taxes was passed in the House. However, in the Senate it's stalled. The big argument is what Alaska is going to be guaranteed if it's giving the companies a 2billion dollar tax break.
